

3PGC Updated Practitioner Qualification Requirements April 2022

As a professional organization, the 3PGC upholds a level of standards for a practitioner to qualify as an approved provider that's listed on our 3PGC practitioner directory.

If you're interested in becoming an approved 3PGC practitioner, please review the list of qualifications below to confirm you meet the minimum standards for approval:

Note: If you don't meet one of the standards but feel your situation would qualify for an exception, please send an email describing your unique situation to info@3pgc.org. You'll be contacted by a 3PGC board member.

By applying to be listed as a registered practitioner on the 3PGC.org website, I am affirming that I meet all of the listed criteria below.

1. You routinely refer to Sydney Banks as the primary source material for what you teach.

The point of this criteria is to establish that your work is connected to the body of work of Syd Banks.

It's equally important to establish your connection to the work of Syd Banks to your clients. This allows us to keep the purity and legacy of this body of work alive long-term through name recognition.

We do understand the importance of using relatable and client-friendly language in marketing and establishing rapport with clients. For that reason, you may be unsure how or when to reference Syd Banks.

It may make sense to wait until you've formed a relationship and trust with clients later in the teaching process. That's perfectly normal. For example, as you near the end of your process you might mention "By the way, the guy that originally pointed to what I've been sharing is named Syd Banks. Here's the best resource if you're interested in source materials:

www.sydbanks.com."

2. You have a professional Three Principles practice or an organizational role that is specifically and solely dedicated to teaching the principles.

This Three Principles practice or business is not combined with other services you offer. For example, a practice in which you provide services such as acupuncture or creativity training would not qualify. A practice in which you also teach or incorporate other spiritual or personal development methods or philosophies would not qualify. If you are running a 3 Principles based practice but are also running an additional practice based on a different psychological approach, that would be considered mixing.

3. You have spent a minimum of 2 years teaching the Three Principles in a professional practice or organizational role that is specifically and solely dedicated to teaching the Three Principles.

There are 3 Categories of Registered Practitioners:

1. Registered Practitioner  All currently registered practitioners will remain in this category unless (and until) they apply for the 200- or 400-hour category.
2. Registered Practitioner with 200+ hours of Direct Client Contact annually (every year)
3. Registered Practitioner with 400+ hours of Direct Client Contact annually (every year)

- A. To qualify as a Registered Practitioner with 200+ or 400+ hours of Direct Client Contact, you've met the minimum number of Direct Client Contact hours annually (every year) for the practitioner level you're applying for:

Registered Practitioner with 200+ hours of Direct Client Contact annually (every year):

Practitioners have a minimum of 200 hours of Direct Client Contact.

Of those 200 hours, at least 150 hours were paid for through financial compensation, salary, grant, or barter. No more than 50 hours were volunteer or pro-bono.

Registered Practitioner with 400+ hours of Direct Client Contact annually (every year):

Practitioners have a minimum of 400 hours of Direct Client Contact annually (every year).

Of those 400 hours, at least 300 hours were paid for through financial compensation, salary, grant, or barter. No more than 100 hours were volunteer or pro-bono.

B. What qualifies as Direct Client Contact hours:

- Coaching or teaching with someone who has hired you as a Three Principles practitioner and not in any other capacity.
- Coaching or teaching an individual or in a group setting that takes place in a professional setting and/or capacity (for example: an office, public service facility, banquet room, retreat site, community center, rehab center, jail/prison/juvenile hall, scheduled walks, retreats, outings.)
- A session, class, or meeting that is arranged in advance. Unscheduled, casual or informal conversations would not qualify.

C. You may be asked to confirm the number of Direct Client Contact hours you have completed and to submit a verification log.

D. There may be a possibility that we contact you in the future to discuss or review the philosophy, model, approach, or focus of your practice in an effort to maintain the integrity and alignment of our Registered Practitioners base.

E. When renewing each year, practitioners will be asked to re-confirm that they still meet these requirements.

4. You have read and agreed to the 3PGC Principles-Based Practitioners Philosophy (click here to read).

5. Ethics Statement:

Being a Three Principles Practitioner means that we place ourselves in a position of trust with our clients. It is the Practitioner's responsibility to ensure that they act in a morally responsible and professional manner and maintain professional boundaries. A Three Principles Practitioner should not engage in false advertising or unrealistic claims, demeaning language, violence, bigotry, racism, harassment, sexual harassment or inappropriate communications in person or through the use of technology and other means. A practitioner will do their best to listen to client's complaints of mistreatment and to resolve any moral and ethical conflicts that arise. If these are not resolved to the client's satisfaction, the 3PGC board expects that these complaints or unresolved conflicts be brought to the attention of any 3PGC board member. The board/Practitioner's Committee will strive to resolve these issues to the satisfaction of all involved. The 3PGC board reserves the right to remove practitioners from our list due to what it considers serious ethical violations.

The Annual Practitioner Membership Dues of $150 per year.

Note: Again, if you don't meet one of the standards but feel your situation would qualify for an exception, please send an email describing your unique situation to info@3pgc.org. You'll be contacted by a 3PGC board member.
